New Bedford, Aug. 15.—Michael Kennedy, two years old of 26 S. Valley boulevard, is the 125th child to be killed by autos in this State this year. The child and his sister were struck by an automobile while they were walking on the sidewalk near their home. The machine had become unmanageable and had crossed the sidewalk. WOMAN ROUNDS UP TWO RUM- RUNNERS

Houlton, Me., Aug. 15.—Miss Mabel Joy of Mowhatche, Maine, only woman constable, demonstrated on the old Military Road that a woman peace officer is about as gentle and easy to handle as a lioness.

Assisted only by a humble "frisk" and an unshakable determination to hold up two rum-runners from Mowhatche, and although threatened with a brick in the back of the head, she held them until the arrival of Sheriff Grant of Houlton. The rum-runners, John Smith of Houlton and James Finn of South, were sentenced to three months in jail and fined $100 each and costs. In default of payment they were given six months each additional.

HUNDREDS ARE HOMELESS, 10 DIE, IN FLOOD

Salt Lake City, Utah, Aug. 15.—Rain and deluge mark the path of famine which swept over thousands of acres of land in the fertile valleys of northern Utah when the flood gates of the Wasatch Range burst forth upon the numerous farm settlements and communities sending along the border of the mountains. Hundreds have been made homeless.

The people were known to have perished and the towns of Farmington and Winlock were badly damaged. The local property damage exceeds $1,000,000.

CABLE BRIEFS

Managua, Nicaragua.—President Chamorro, replying to an interpellation, denied that the United States was trying to intervene in the coming presidential election. "Our next President will be elected by national opinion," he asserted.

Warsaw.—S. P. Juchacz, minister of trade and industry, who left Saturday morning for the United States to obtain a loan for Poland, has returned from Paris. It is announced his visit to America has been postponed.

Search for nearly a score of persons reported missing since the flood struck was continued today by National guardsmen.

Huge numbers, some 400,000 of small houses, are littered over northern highways. An area two miles wide north of Farmington is covered to a depth of nearly twenty feet with trees and wreckage.

The manager failed to return and his wife and family here declared they had not heard from him.

NAME BUCKETING "HIGHER-UPS"

New York, Aug. 15.—Additional indictments naming, it was today produced, those "higher-ups" in the "bucketing ring," were waited to the financial, legal and political New York. The indictments returned yesterday by a Federal Grand Jury against William J. Fallon, lawyer, and Eugene F. McGee, partner, who were formerly counsel for Edward M. Butler and William P. McGee, confessed bookies, had been returned for several days.

The former bookies also were named in the indictments, which charged conspiracy to withhold the records of the Police from.

The indictments are again in the mysterious hiding place which in months ago took the bookies' names out of the public eye. The description "somewhere in New York" is as much as prosecuting officials will come to telling its location.

The new indictments against the two lawyers and ten bookies contain two counts. The first alleges conspiracy to conceal books and records. The second charges six years' imprisonment of conspiracy to extort and extort property and assets.

It is at Fallon & McGee, bookies who banked nearly two years ago for $100,000, leaving a new creditor in view.

The Rev. Charles L. Noyes is 43, who a year ago returned after forty years' service as pastor of the Broadway Winter Hill Congregational Church in Somerville and went to Japan, where he was acting pastor of the Union Church there. It is said there, according to relatives received here.

Rev. C. L. Noyes was born in 1880. When he went to Yokohama, Japan, a year ago, he took with him his wife, formerly Mrs. Walde Noyes, then living in Auburndale, his widow's name, and whom he married a short time before he left for Japan.

BRUSH FIRES CAUSE DAMAGE IN CONCORD

Concord Junction firemen spent a busy twenty-four hours fighting brush fires in the old Machoboro road section. The largest of the blazes originated on the land of Jeremiah Sheehan. About an acre and a half of brush land was laid waste before the blaze was checked. The firemen were then called to fight a small grass fire on the land of William J. Crowley, near the corner of the first blaze. Hardly had they returned when they were recalled to the Sheehan land where the fire had started again. Seven acres of brush land were destroyed before the fire was finally extinguished.

The planes, traveling at eighty miles per hour, are scheduled to make only one stop on the way to Europe, at Mitchell Field, Long Beach, for an hour to take on gasoline and oil.

HERE'S BOUNCING BOY AND HIS MOTHER

MRS. CELIA WIGON AND JACKIE

FANNIE BRICE GETS A NEW NOSE TODAY
Atlantic City, N. J., Aug. 15.—To-day, Fannie Brice, a famous comedienne, is scheduled to don a 1923 model nose. The nose that has served her so well for years—she hesitates to say how many years—must sacrifice its generous proportions for the nose of an artist.

CHILD FALLS 97 FEET; GETS UP REAL MAD
Winthrop's "bouncing boy" does not have to be called by that name. Four-year-old Jackie Wagon of No. 558 Shirley street, who fell thirty-seven feet to the ground from his bedroom window, wants it distinctly understood that he didn't bounce at all. "No, sir, I hit the ground and I stayed there," he declared.

Jackie came close to being "bounced out" of his home, in earnest, a few minutes after his big drop. It was learned today.

His mother, Mrs. Celia Wigon, knew nothing of his fall, and when John Wagon of No. 7 Beacon street carried the boy into his home, the mother, not knowing that the boy was her son, did not take kindly to having a "stranger" carried into the bedroom of her children.

She entered the room behind Catherine, prepared to voice her objections. Then she looked at the face on the bed. She swooned.

"I'd like to know who said I was a bouncer," in an aggrieved tone he told a Boston American reporter. "And I'd like to see anyone fell that far and bounce."

But despite Jackie's objections, he has been nominated "the bouncing boy" by his chums.

'BIGGEST DOPE CABOT,' MEET PEDLAR' CAUGHT MR. CABOT, NEE AT RIDEY ST. KABOTCHNICK

Theodore Deutschman, thirty-five years old, of No. 271 Normandy street, Dorchester, who, the police say, is the biggest wholesale drug pedlar in Boston, was arrested today, it is alleged, he sold 200 grains of morphine for $45 to Sergeant Robert Caverly of the headquarters drug squad.

Following the sale, which it is alleged, was made in the rear of the Dudley Street Terminal, Deutschman is said to have attempted to dispose of the marked money he had received by throwing it in a trash bowl. Deutschman was unable to sell $5000 bill.

According to the police, Deutschman has been operating in the Dudley Street Terminal for some time. He was accustomed to meeting the drug peddlars there they say, and after making the sale, to make a rapid exit by train. He has a woman associate, it is claimed. Deutschman is said to have been having several at Alameda prison for dope smuggling. He has been engaged with his father, Tom, in refreshment stand enterprises at Franklin Park.

Here's to dear old Philly And that blue boat 'What's in a name?' A Kabotchnik becomes a Cabot. While the Cabots become taxmen.

Yes, the Philadelphia judge who was passing upon the application of Henry and Marie Kabotchnik to change their name to Cabot allowed they could.

Imagine conditions out Back Bay way. What's the country coming to? Imagine, Kabotchnik to Cabot. Not even Kabot or Kabbage, but that appendage that bristles with aristocracy, i. e., Cabot.

As soon as the custom becomes an interior sport and the Coburns become Coburns—low cream or otherwise—and the Medowskys become Medowskys and the Longwits become Longwits—well, out Back Bay way here's what'll happen. The Cabots will change their name to Kabotchnik and once again attain the exclusive name they are used to.

CHAUFFEUR "RUINED" BY MRS. MCCORMICK'S "PSYCHIC WAVES"

MADE HIM FORGET HIS FAMILY

Became World Wanderer. Then Was Drawn to Chicago. Swiss Employee Testifies

Chicago, Aug. 15.—Just because a man believes "that Mrs. Edith Rockefeller McCormick's psychic influence" over him has made him forget his home and friends and follow her from the farthest corner of the earth, is no reason that he should be held insane.

So said a jury today after considering the strange case of Lewis Emil Ammon, formerly a chauffeur for Mrs. McCormick, and according to his testimony at one time a member of her "Psychic Club."

Ammon followed to the entrance Mrs. McCormick tonight with her from Switzerland where she lived for several years prior to her coming to America to obtain a divorce from Harold P. McCormick, harvest master, Lake Edward Krut, her Swiss architect, Ammon is a Swiss, denies hypnotism.

Ammon, according to witnesses, believed that Mrs. McCormick was under the "psychic influence." "I was a devoted student of psychoanalysis, and together with Mrs. McCormick he attended the classes of Dr. Karl Jung, noted Austrian psychoanalyst, in Switzerland.

It was in Switzerland, Ammon testified, that he first felt the "influence" emanating from Mrs. McCormick.

"I would not say that I was hypnotized," Ammon asserted when hypnotism was suggested as a possible explanation.

Dr. Francis J. Gerry, superintendent of the Psychopathic Hospital in testifying to the belief that Ammon is sane, said:

"Ammon told me his moral nature was changed by the 'influence'."

"Because of that 'influence' he carried on an intrigue with a maid in the McCormick home, he told me, although he had been a faithful husband and father before that time."

"Then he told me he sought to flee from the influence; that he went to Madagascar in search of gold and precious stones, but that the 'influence' sought him out again and set him to wandering."

"He shook it off and journeyed to Peru, Lema in the Muerita Islands, where his family joined him. In March of this year, however, the 'influence' caused him to come to America."

Ammon, Dr. Gerry said, had sought him out voluntarily to obtain aid in ridding himself of the "influence."

Miss Emily Blevins, private secretary to Mrs. McCormick for ten years, also testified that she believed Ammon sane and "exceptionally intelligent."

FRANC-BRITISH PATIENT SLAIN

TRADE WAR'S THREATENED

Paris, Aug. 15 (AP)—Suggestion of economic war between France and Great Britain are met with freely in conversations with leading French business men and are creeping into the press.

Large importers express the view that business between the two countries must necessarily decline on account of the extraordinary rate in the pound sterling, the outcome of what is declared here to be the London campaign for depreciation of the franc.

The Matin today asks Prime Minister Laval if he is not aware his policy in holding to bring about a movement in which the watchword will be, "No purchase in England."

The balance of trade was turned by France's war needs and has otherwise remained favorable to Great Britain.

France, it is pointed out, could counter the balance to her favor by obtaining from purchases of British coal, which she might get along without if the Ruhr production increased.

One large importer said he expected the steel works would increase the use of silk in place of woolen for women's clothes.

The possibility of such a conflict has started the people to thinking about the winter's coal. There is an ample supply in view, supporting deliveries from England, but prices are soaring on account of the rise in sterling. One suggestion of effort to meet this is the latest mention of the Franco-Belgian measure for an increase in the Ruhr coal production.

CHARMING GIRL WINNER GOES SHOPPING

MISS MARGARET BLACK.

Miss Black Makes Rounds of Stores Selecting Clothing and Articles for Her "Trousseau"

By MISS MARGARET L. BLACK
Winner of Boston American's MOST CHARMING girl tournament.
The "Charming Girl" editor of the Boston American has asked me to write a story about my experiences in shopping preparatory to my trip to Atlantic City. Although not an expert at this sort of thing I will do the best I can. Here goes:

In the first place I was given a list of the Boston merchants who had agreed to contribute articles of adornment and wearing apparel to my "trousseau." The first place I went was J. J. Fox, No. 41 Winter street. I met the manager who was very cordial and he informed me that the blue fur that his firm is to give me is now on the way from New York. I am to call in a few days to get it.

The next place I went was the Armstrong, Inc. Company of No. 84 Beverly street. This concern gave me a very nice mink stole, necklace, and a large box of chocolates. Then I went to The Touraine Glove Company at Water and Washington streets where they permitted me to select four pairs of history of different colors and a pair of long white kid gloves.

From there I went to the Thayer, McNeil Company, Temple place. The manager told me to look around his up-to-date establishment and go left whatever pleased my fancy. My first selection was a pair of green and white kid French shoes. They are very soft shoes with a medium high heel of green. The remainder of the shoe is white with green trimmings with one strap but failing at the side. They are exceedingly snappy and I know I am going to enjoy wearing them.

ONLY PAIR OF ITS KIND.
My next selection was a very odd pair of Patent shoes. I was informed by the manager that only one pair of this design had been manufactured. I then selected a pair of the finest quality to match these shoes.

My next visit was the distinctive Jewelry store of A. Russell & Co. in Winter street. It was originally intended by the manager that the girl chosen as "Miss Boston" should have a pearl necklace with diamond clasp, but as I already own such a necklace he suggested that I select something else.

My choice finally centered upon the loveliest pearl bracelet I have ever seen in many a day. It consists of three rows of pearls fastened with a small diamond clasp. The middle row contains large pearls of the finest grade.

The next place I went was the exclusive millinery shop of Maurice in Winter street, where I was welcomed by the manager who asked me to select three unusual hats. The first of this trio was a simple hat of black satin lined with white tulle. It was decorated with green crepe de chine, gathered on the side by a large cluster of tiny white flowers. The third hat was

RECOVER 95 BODIES IN MINE HORROR

Others Believed Under Surface; 37 of the Entombed Crew Are Rescued Alive

Kennemer, Wyo., Aug. 13 (AP).—Today 95 bodies had been recovered from Mine No. 1 of the Kennemer Coal Company, whose workings were partly wrecked by an explosion. The work of bringing out the dead is continuing.

Company officials were unable to state exactly the number of men entombed or the number of dead. A thorough search of the mine alone is expected to reveal the number.

Kennemer, Wyo., Aug. 13 (AP).—In the grip of sorrow and desolation, Kennemer and the little coal camp suburb, Frontier, one mile away, where approximately 100 miners perished in the explosion, already has set about the task of preparing her dead for burial.

Throughout the hours of darkness, as lights shed a pallid illumination over a seething grief-stricken throng at the portal of the mine, rescue workers brought forth charred bodies of the victims who were suffocated as they sought safety from poisonous gases.

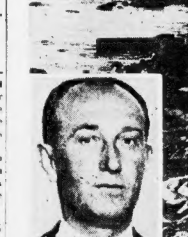

Thirty-seven of the 127 or 134 miners who were entombed by the blast have emerged from the mine since the explosion, but the exact number of the dead remains a mystery, although officials of the company declared a blowout that was responsible for the death. Another theory is that a "roof" fell, causing the miners to be crushed by the weight of the rock.

Survivors were brought to the surface by the rescue crew of the United States Bureau of Mines. The rescue workers, after being below several hours, reported the explosion was evidently caused by the failure of one of the pillars which had been used to support the roof.

EX-FIRE HORSES MAD FLIGHT AFTER ENGINE

once a fire horse, always a fire horse.
The call of the fire-bells proved to strong for two ex-fire horses drawing a city team driven by Thomas Terry, forty-four years old, of No. 75 Francis street, Broadway, to resist. DRIVER INJURED.

In fact, so strong was the call that the driver suffered a fractured skull in a vain attempt to check the flight of the animals. He is at the City Hospital in a serious condition.

The horses were first aroused by the clang-clang-clang of a fire engine sounding to a fire along Commonwealth avenue, Back Bay. The fire truck passed the horses near Fairfield street, where the team had been parked by the driver. The equines, their old fire blood up, immediately started out in pursuit of the fire engine.

CRASH INTO POLE.
The driver appeared on the scene in time to catch sight of his disappearing team. He hopped on the running board of a passing auto and gave chase. As the auto passed the horses, Terry attempted to grasp the bridle of one of them. His hand closed on thin air and he fell to the ground.

The flight of the horses was finally checked when they crashed into a small sample hat of black taffeta trimmed with green and black streamers. This hat will be used for traveling.

I then called upon C. P. Hovey Company in Summer street, where I made a selection of unusually fine lingerie. From there I went to the Winchester stores on Washington street, opposite Broadway, where I selected a snappy sport suit.

THE WAYS OF A HUSBAND—By ANN LISLE

A Splendid Sequel to the Famous Story of Wedded Life, "When a Girl Marries"

DEAR Anne, I begged Ralph "don't give up. We'll find him yet, somehow. There's no sign of Noah." I asked, managing to talk myself together and getting up to avoid the gentle hand that had to do with offering me the slightest effort.

I was grateful for Ralph's interpretation of my collapse. I was grateful for his readiness to stand by. But kindness from the wrong man made me all the more unhappy because the right one—my Jim—didn't understand. And I realized how unfair it was to let Ralph spend himself on me and come to feel the pain of giving the help I couldn't take.

"There's no word of Noah," repeated Ralph. "Not a hospital record—not a boat license—not a hotel or Salvation Army station gives us a whisper of him. I have sought out. We'll find that lad yet, Anne."

"No word," I repeated, unconsciously repeating the partner's name. "Not a word. I've cleared out every corner and I know the thing to do will be to wait on just to have word."

"They'll come to their senses," replied Ralph, severely. "That boy wouldn't take a hint, but I said once I'd make my life of Noah's honesty. I said it. We'll prove it yet, dear."

I wiped at the words. But before I could move a familiar voice croaked hoarsely from the doorway.

"Am I intruding?" asked Ralph, stepping into the house and giving me a moment to regain my self. "I'm right in here. How did Aunt May come to be out with that bad cold of yours?"

"Hello, Ralph. How'dy, Ralph—how'dy, Anne?"

"I had to come to town. She sent me as a matter of fact. Things needing my attention."

"Remember, we're expecting you Sunday, young fellow."

"All right. I'll obey the mandate of my Imperial Aunt and give my new rat a what you call a 'hello.' Maybe if you invite Anne I can persuade her and Jim to go."

"No, no, folks," exclaimed Ralph. "I'm in case in his turn and hurrying himself out as if he were a schoolboy caught playing hooky."

Max Howley turned and stared after him with steady, unblinking eyes. Then he looked at his wife, figure into a chair and said abruptly:

"Little Anne—here's an old man waiting to talk to you like a Dutch uncle. I've got something important to say to you. Will you listen to your old uncle?"

Smiled at Howley.

"What can I do for you?" I smiled at Max Howley. But, try as I would to appear casual, I felt for "casual." I hadn't the slightest idea why he had come blundering into my office so precipitately that Ralph Lucy took an abrupt departure.

"What can you do for me?" repeated Max Howley, as if weighing in. "Well, I came here to see what I could do for you. But it comes to the same thing, I guess. You think the world of my little Susanna May, don't you?"

The query was wistful. I answered it simply: "I love her dearly."

"I know that," said Max Howley with the greatest satisfaction. Then he added shrewdly: "And you think none the worse of me for wanting her for having the sense to fall in love with a wonderful creature like her. You're not put it past me in my old age to take up with some silly little creature young enough to be my granddaughter?"

"Oh, I never took you for anything other than a man of brains and ability," I protested indignantly. "And an idiot where the women folk were concerned. Well, that is so may be. But I've suffered to spend the rest of my life, and even before my Susanna May. And there's nothing too much for me to do for anyone who loves like she does you. You're her kin, if feelings can make false friends. She couldn't care more for you if she shed your cradle when you were a babe and put you out of a silver portrait. And that makes me your uncle whether you like it or not."

He looked at me with a comical air of daring me to deny this. I found myself smiling with astonished earnestness.

Rockhill Told

"Oh, I don't deny it," "That's money I deserve," he replied drily. "But I'll come to the point, thinking you for not hurrying me and flustering an old man. Now, seeing I'm your uncle and was once a director in this company of yours, I would just like to know what you mean by going to that remote of mine instead of me when you're hard pressed for money?"

I set my lips tightly to hold back an exclamation that might have been a scream.

"Why—what do you mean?" I asked with a semblance of coolness.

"Don't play busy," Max Howley answered brusquely. "If you need money I have a darn sight more than that those boys who're running here with the start they got from me."

"Yes, I know," I replied cautiously. "But you weren't at your office and when I trailed you down to your place in the country Aunt May reported that you were sick in bed. I couldn't believe her."

"You can't bother her," amended Max Howley, "except by a reminder that she's a childless old couple like us can't ever have any more fun than standing by a girl bent of her life—even if that's procuring from me."

Smiled at Howley.

"What can I do for you?" I smiled at Max Howley. But, try as I would to appear casual, I felt for "casual." I hadn't the slightest idea why he had come blundering into my office so precipitately that Ralph Lucy took an abrupt departure.

"What can you do for me?" repeated Max Howley, as if weighing in. "Well, I came here to see what I could do for you. But it comes to the same thing, I guess. You think the world of my little Susanna May, don't you?"

The query was wistful. I answered it simply: "I love her dearly."

"I know that," said Max Howley with the greatest satisfaction. Then he added shrewdly: "And you think none the worse of me for wanting her for having the sense to fall in love with a wonderful creature like her. You're not put it past me in my old age to take up with some silly little creature young enough to be my granddaughter?"

"Oh, I never took you for anything other than a man of brains and ability," I protested indignantly. "And an idiot where the women folk were concerned. Well, that is so may be. But I've suffered to spend the rest of my life, and even before my Susanna May. And there's nothing too much for me to do for anyone who loves like she does you. You're her kin, if feelings can make false friends. She couldn't care more for you if she shed your cradle when you were a babe and put you out of a silver portrait. And that makes me your uncle whether you like it or not."

He looked at me with a comical air of daring me to deny this. I found myself smiling with astonished earnestness.

Rockhill Told

"Oh, I don't deny it," "That's money I deserve," he replied drily. "But I'll come to the point, thinking you for not hurrying me and flustering an old man. Now, seeing I'm your uncle and was once a director in this company of yours, I would just like to know what you mean by going to that remote of mine instead of me when you're hard pressed for money?"

I set my lips tightly to hold back an exclamation that might have been a scream.

"Why—what do you mean?" I asked with a semblance of coolness.

"Don't play busy," Max Howley answered brusquely. "If you need money I have a darn sight more than that those boys who're running here with the start they got from me."

"Yes, I know," I replied cautiously. "But you weren't at your office and when I trailed you down to your place in the country Aunt May reported that you were sick in bed. I couldn't believe her."

"You can't bother her," amended Max Howley, "except by a reminder that she's a childless old couple like us can't ever have any more fun than standing by a girl bent of her life—even if that's procuring from me."

Max Howley turned and stared after him with steady, unblinking eyes. Then he looked at his wife, figure into a chair and said abruptly:

"Little Anne—here's an old man waiting to talk to you like a Dutch uncle. I've got something important to say to you. Will you listen to your old uncle?"

The Quest of Happiness

They thought to enjoy in a motor van.

WHAT is there about happiness that makes it seem as elusive as a bird and yet that may cause it to be present in the very objects we least suspect? Every one has his dream, his vision of perfect happiness. In such and such a setting I should be ideally happy," we are accustomed to say, and yet the moment of wishing may be happier than we would be were our wish to come true that instant.

Isn't happiness something found not in places but in hearts?

And to have happiness and to hold happiness, isn't it necessary to make some other heart happy?—PEGGY PRENTICE.

SECRETS OF HEALTH AND SUCCESS

MAKING BABY'S SECOND SUMMER SAFE

By Charles A. L. Reed, M. D., Former President of the American Medical Association.

WHY do you dread your baby's second summer?

It is because so many people speak of this time with bated breath. They have reason to be so—because of course, the summer really is a hazardous time for the baby.

It depends a little, of course, upon just how old the baby is in his "second summer."

If he has been in the house, this is about the time that he must be weaned or has been weaned.

The baby teeth are being cut—"cut" is a good word, for the teeth are actually cutting their way through the often tough and gnarled gums.

These two conditions, combined with other conditions depending upon them, are of themselves enough either to upset the baby and make him cross, or to make him seriously ill.

If the weaning has not been gradual and sufficient, or if the gradual withdrawal of the breast milk there has not been equally gradual substitution of other food—you have to educate the baby to take the food that he must continue to eat through life.

This means the establishment of a habit.

These germs are a very real and nearly fatal danger.

Incidentally, these germs, rather than the indigestibility of the pulp of the apple, are responsible for the "green apple" colic of older children.

The widespread activity of germ life under the favoring influence of summer temperatures, tends to make hazards on every hand for the baby that is already made irritable and restless by gums made sore by erupting teeth.

This means that the very generally met by keeping the idea of germs constantly before you. Germs are no more-hugger. They are very real and very dangerous.

It is your chief job to keep them out of baby's stomach.

Soldier Shields Pal Because He Has "Good Mother"

Reynolds, twenty years old, of No. 10 North Avenue, Danbury, Ct., a soldier at Camp Devens, wouldn't give police the name of his pal who helped him steal an auto here and drive it to Springfield, because "that fellow has a good mother."

Reynolds was asked the name of his pal when he faced Special Justice Riley in Central District Court after a State trooper had found him asleep in the machine. The other lad, a Worcester bus driver, Reynolds was held in $2,000 for Superior Court on the charge of breaking, entering and larceny.

They are reported in motion pictures and shown in various pictures of Greater Boston. A total of $225 in prize was awarded the authors of the place used on the screen, beginning with a first prize of $5 and tapering down to twelve dollar prizes.

Medbury Says

By John P. Medbury

OUR Senators are making some wonderful discoveries, but not one of them has yet found out why a girl cries when you propose to her.

A girl you're going to ask to marry you and her eyes will begin to leak faster than a fountain pen in a white heat.

WHEN she commences to sob, you don't know whether it's because she's sorry for you or for herself.

SHE'll tell you that she's the happiest girl in the world and then she'll break out crying.

FOR a minute you begin to wonder whether you struck her or not.

THEN you realize that you didn't because you're not married to her yet.

SOME people think a girl cries from surprise, but doesn't. The chances are she knew you were going to propose to her long before you knew you were going to propose to her.

HER weeping is probably from fatigue, she has been used waiting for you to ask her.

SHE'S been waiting six months for you to propose and is all worn out being patient.

THEN when you finally ask her the honest truth is, because she's so glad the marriage is over.

A FEW minutes later, when she tells her mother about the proposal, she cries again, and as soon as she stops, the mother starts to cry.

THIS puts the man in an awkward position, he doesn't know when it's his turn to cry.

HIS tears usually come a couple of years later.

ONE day when he tells his mother and said, "Mother, when I married, I asked her to be my wife and she cried all evening."

THEN his mother began to weep. This was the first time since she was a girl who didn't shed her father, and he was crying.

IT'S getting so that a girl has to be a natural and an artificial when he proposes to her girl.

EITHER that or come up a dame with a blue eye.

BUT after you propose to your sweetheart and she accepts you, she usually some weeping for the time you get married and then she doesn't cry again until she gets something.

BE ABLE TO GROW WISER IN YOUR GROWING YEARS.

REMEMBER the good resolutions you made in regard to a change in certain actions of yours? Did you keep the good resolve today?

Instead you have been drifting in the same old way.

You have made a little more in money, but your daily expenses, as you know, are more than you did yesterday.

Growing older, but not wiser. What is to be the ultimate outcome?

No effort to improve your work, no effort to add to your fund of general useful information, and no days broken into years.

You feel that there is plenty of use and fun in that once you get down to business you will make things fit.

So you fit and flatter about, and one day is just like another.

Most of your thought, if the truth were known, is just how much personal pleasure and leisure you can get to indulge in your favorite pastime.

You rush to your office or shop and hustle through your work to get ready for your play spell and you go through the same program each day.

Whither are you bound, stranger?

There's a mark against him too. He's dead set against the brew.

No, the H-BREW Mr. Shean.

A Wasp That Is Scientist and Murderer

Copyright, 1923, Star Co.

PREPARING FOOD FOR AN UNBORN CHILD

This is the hunter wasp preparing a cricket to be eaten later by its young.

The cricket, with its powerful hind legs, could destroy the wasp. See how the wasp is holding those hind legs down and at the same time holding in its "mouth" one of the feather-like hairs of the cricket's abdomen. The cricket's head is pressed back and the wasp's deadly sting is driven into the victim's neck.

This hunter wasp, or "sphez," is performing a surgical operation that would puzzle a human scientist.

The wasp stings and paralyzes the cricket, but does not kill it. For the cricket is meant to feed the young wasp when it is hatched out, much later.

If the wasp killed the cricket, it would soon be decayed and worthless to feed the wasp's unborn child.

Scientifically the wasp stings the cricket in three separate places, paralyzing the miserable creature so that it cannot move, yet does not die.

The wasp lays her egg upon the cricket, buries egg and cricket together, and when the young wasp hatches out, the cricket, alive but unable to move, is there to be devoured.

There is no greater wonder in all nature than the picture you see here.

For this wasp, with scientific knowledge that is marvelous, performs a surgical operation AND HAS NEVER BEEN TAUGHT. All the knowledge is inherited ready to use.

The baby wasp that is to eat this paralyzed cricket will never see its mother, but will grow up in its turn, hunt for crickets, caterpillars, weevils and, untought, know exactly how to sting them in the nervous centres, paralyze them and store them away to be eaten.

What would you write about this picture, and what moral would you draw from it?

Will you compare the WASP that stores away helpless creatures half alive to be eaten by its young with the rich MAN who fills a factory with child workers, half alive, that the rich man's children may live upon the bodies of those child workers?

"Brevity Is the Soul of Wit"

It Also Shows Condensed Thinking—and Mr. Coolidge Has It

Copyright, 1923, Star Co.

"What kind of man is Coolidge?" That question ten million men and women have asked ten million others in the last few days.

Soon you will know what KIND of a man he is, for important questions are pending here and in Europe, in the coal mines and railroads, on the farms.

Even in the short time that remains before March, 1925, Mr. Coolidge will have answered in a dozen ways that question, "What kind of man is Coolidge?"

The answer to that question is important to every American. For among all rulers of the world, now that the Russian Czar and the Turkish Sultan have been abolished, the most powerful individual is THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. He has more personal power than any King.

One little anecdote shows that President Coolidge possesses at least one important quality of thought and speech. BREVITY—also that he doesn't take himself too seriously. Once, when the President was Governor of Massachusetts, his friend, Mr. Turgenev, wrote a long letter asking him to speak at the Fourth Annual Dinner in Vermont, President Coolidge's home State. Governor Coolidge replied as follows: "Dear Turgenev: Won't go. Don't care to make speeches. Nobody cares to hear them. Yours, Cal." That is brief and pleasing, and enlightening.

Not Enough of Them

Copyright, 1923, Star Co.

In Alabama there has been excitement because the United States hospital for negro veterans at Tuskegee was manned, as regards its officials, entirely by colored men. At one time it was thought that troops might be called out to quiet the disturbance. Now the white citizens of Tuskegee think they have won their fight for white officials.

With 1924 so close at hand they may be disappointed, but this is certain: The wounded negro soldiers in the hospital would prefer white doctors taking care of them. There are competent colored doctors undoubtedly, but not enough of them.

I am not very strong and cannot go out to work, so what I want to ask you is if any of your kind readers could give me some fancy work to do. WORDS FROM THE LIPS OF WISE MEN

PLENNESS, so much valued, is a man's specialty means to do in the matter. A man specially means counsel when he finds many counsels. Never is anything more unjust than an ignorant man who thinks nothing does properly unless he himself has done it. Praise is rebuke to the man whose conscience allows it not. Deliberating is not delaying.

FRANCE, ENGLAND SHAKE FISTS ACROSS THE CHANNEL

By Herbert Kaufman

FRENCH cables have cried "woll!" so often during the past seven months that even Germany's distressed condition and the increasingly strained relations between England and France exert no influence whatever on the local stock market.

Gustav Stresemann, reputed monarchist, reactionary and political associate of the Ruhr magnates, unexpectedly assumes command of Germany's storm-battered ship of state, and forms a coalition that isolates the Communists in the Reichstag.

His first day in office is celebrated by violent clashes between populace and police, in which forty civilians are killed and one hundred and fifty seriously wounded.

This crisis at Berlin, however, does not concern Paris or London editors nearly so much as the fists across channel.

Poincare and Baldwin blame each other for the hopeless state of Central Europe, and exchange accusations of selfish and illegally interpreted treaty terms.

France insists that England's encouragement is chiefly accountable for enemy resistance. England, without mincing words, credits France with a deliberate intent to impoverish and permanently prostrate the Reich.

Exceedingly interesting, no doubt, to more or less prominent folk voyagers, including the former chairman of the Shipping Board, a United States Senator, several members of Congress, the Secretary of Labor, the Solicitor-General, the editor of the Saturday Evening Post, a Supreme Court justice and 325 stateroom passengers, among whom a child may yet be born, some day to prove more illustrious than them all.

A few hours before, scenes of quite a different character were witnessed on a Brooklyn dock. Tears, wails, sobbing and groans were heard as the Greek steamer, sailed away bearing 117 deported aliens.

Constantine Pastavina is torn from the arms of a young sister without another living relative. Constantine is a prosperous merchant, a citizen and an overseas veteran. What needless wretchedness and brutality weekly goes on under Liberty's very torch!
